

Approach Hague Declaration Progress Tracking

Objective of the progress tracking

The tracking of actions related to the Hague Declaration action areas provides a concise and easy accessible overview of actions, activities and projects on climate and security. The tracking wants to show 'what works', good practice and action that could be scaled up in terms of capacity, analysis or funding. This visualisation aims at encouraging more practical engagement on climate and security by illustrating successfully implemented actions.

The activities and projects showcased on this website are based on

- Survey responses from stakeholders within the climate security community. The survey has been sent to 79 signatories of the Hague Declaration and members of the Planetary Security community. In addition, the survey has been distributed widely within the climate security community via social media. The results presented on the website include responses from 35 completed surveys.
- Interviews with 28 signatories of the Hague Declaration and additional stakeholders from the climate security community. All signatories of the Hague Declaration working at an operational level, survey participants providing information on concrete activities and members of the Planetary Security Community, attending previous PSI conferences, have been contacted for interviews.
- Desk research on the action areas of the Hague Declaration

The activities presented on this website have been selected based on their relevance for the Hague Declaration action areas. Priority has been given to current and on-going activities which apply innovative approaches to address climate and security and can serve as best practice examples for the climate security community.

The projects and activities presented on this website are either supported or implemented by signatories of the Hague Declaration or other organisations and individuals whose work is contributing to the realisation of the Declaration's six action areas and overall goal of addressing climate-related security challenges. The projects and activities showcased were not necessarily initiated because of the Hague Declaration but contribute to its objectives.

Criteria for supporting organisations and governments presented on the website

- Signatories of the Hague Declaration who are supporting activities relevant to its action areas.
- Governments and organisations which are contributing to the implementation of the Declaration's action areas or carrying out activities and projects which are related to the Declaration and contribute to its objectives.

Selection of activities presented on this website

Information on the projects and activities presented on this website has been collected through an online survey among the signatories of the Hague Declaration and the wider climate and security community. The survey asked participants how their work relates to the Hague Declaration and to share activities and projects addressing the Declaration's action areas. In addition, 28 interviews were conducted with survey participants, Hague Declaration signatories and members of the Planetary Security community drawn from attendees of previous Planetary Security Conference, ranging from donor governments, implementing organisations, think tanks, private sector, academia, international organisations and NGOs to cross-check information provided in the survey and to ensure experiences of various actors are represented.

This overview of activities reflects the current state of progress and does not claim to be exhaustive.
